A Message From the CEO

A Hard Road To Heroism

by John Hawkins,
President and CEO, The Club

This month's visit with American hero Joe Govea, 91, Retired, Building and Safety, is our 116th Alive! Interview. I've participated in most of them. And I have to say, as we celebrate another Independence Day this month, it's an important interview – Joe's words hit me deeply.

I'd met Joe before, but most recently I ran into his wife, Shirley, and him at a Retired Los Angeles City Employees, Inc. (RLACEI) event. We got to talking – he is an Army veteran, and I'm a Navy veteran – as I wanted to learn about what he went through. We sat down in his back patio as he shared at least some of his memories. The stories might be amazing to hear to those of us who weren't there, but they were harrowing, to say the least, while they were happening.

Some people want to know what it feels like to be a true hero. Warning: It's not always pretty – we encroached upon a lot of bad memories for Joe. Shirley can't get him on a cruise because it reminds him too much of the troop carrier he took to England with German U-boat dangers lurking all around him. He hasn't been back to Europe, even once. He hasn't seen his name inscribed in a Paris memorial as part of the French Legion of Honor. He can't watch the awesome Band of Brothers, a source for many of us who were not there 70 years ago.

Joe told me he didn't even know he was part of the Battle of the Bulge – he was smack-dab in the middle of that epic, horrific fight – until 2004, when his family wrote to the Army Records Center in St. Louis to get his paperwork. When you're focused on getting the job done and staying alive while doing it, you don't think about the name of the battle you're in. Like the true rifleman that he was, he wasn't too concerned about impressive-sounding titles.

A few horrific stories did come out of him, but there's more than modesty going on in his reticence to tell them. There are pain, and anger, and horror, and nightmares that he's trying to stay on top of. Of course I wanted to know the stories, but not knowing them all doesn't limit the respect and awe I feel for Joe and all of our bravest who keep us safe to pursue what matters in life – family, faith, purpose and community.

His family, like all military families, sacrificed a lot. His late mother, Lucia; his first wife, Esther, who died of cancer; Shirley; and their children Susan, Cynthia, Yvonne, Michael and Sarah, all helped Joe get through his demons. And with patience and prayer, he succeeded.

Our freedom cost people like Joe a lot. Like most of the people of the Greatest Generation, he says he was just doing his job. We all know that it was more than that. Spending time with him and his fellow heroes – those who we still have left – is the greatest honor we can bestow upon them. So don't wait. Sit down, ask gentle questions, and then listen. I'm glad I did, and I suggest you consider it, too.

This month's issue is another strong one and carries other good stories, with lots of retirements, graduations, and the like. I love seeing all the sons and daughters of Club Members graduating. Impressive! Keep those photos coming, and don't forget to apply for the Joannie Mukai Club Scholarship by the end of the month, if you're eligible.

I wish you a great Independence Month, and I salute Joe and all those like him who helped make it possible.

JOHN

Letters to the Editor

Chef Larios Is One for The Books

I enjoy reading Alive! (especially the recipes published by Chef Larios). I would like to suggest that the Chef put his recipes into a hard copy cookbook, which I know will be a top seller.

Through the years, his recipes have been a “go-to and save page” and are always delicious, with easy-to-find ingredients and are simple to make.

My idea is for his cookbook to contain a cooking with kid’s section, which would be great for parents and grandparents to have memorable bonding experiences with children, which will also get them away from electronic devices and teach them a life skill.

I would also like a reference at the bottom of any recipe that can be used with a slow cooker, with the actual slow-cooker-adapted recipe added in the slow cooker chapter.

Every few years, the Chef could update his cookbook, or springboard to introduce a grilling/camping cookbook, or a cookbook based on recipes from the many varied ethnic sections of Los Angeles. This could be a springboard for introducing City-themed kitchen products (aprons, dish towels, mats, etc.) or at some point a cookbook that includes submissions from City employees.

This cookbook would be great to market as a retirement or birthday gift. with the profits donated to downtown missions or other worthy nonprofits. I think Chef Larios is camera-perfect and could cook in an online show, and perhaps morph into the next Food Network star

Thanks for listening.

— Armeda Collier, Retired, DWP

Hi Armeda: You bring up a great idea and something I have been thinking about since the first time I had the opportunity to publish “Cooking With the Club” in 2002. I think a cookbook would help many more employees make quick, simple and delicious dishes at home. I also want to thank you for introducing yourself to me at the DWP Retirees Association picnic at Whittier Narrows in early June — it was an honor to meet you. — Chef Larios

Hey! It feels like a piece of our lives is taken from us when we don’t see Chef Larios cooking up his next delicious recipe. We understand when his column doesn’t get published, but please, please, please don’t make a habit of it. Our family, especially our kids, loves reading it.

— Monica Victorino, LAPD

Hi Monica, Alive! has been full to the brim lately with news of Club Members, and of course our great Club benefits, and sometimes things get pushed due to space. We promised we won’t do it very often. — Ed.

Moms and Dads Are a Big Part of the Club Family

Thank you for thinking about all the moms and dads out here in the tribute pages. It is wonderful that the newspaper dedicates the time and space for them. They deserve it, and I know each of their families thinks so, too. Keep up the great work!

Anyway, we love having him here and hope to see him around this way again soon!

Angel's Be Alive!

Kathy, Angel Jr. and Aden are happy hikers.

Angel Jr. takes the lead with Aden right behind him.

There's beautiful cactus along the trail.

Angel Jr., Aden and Kathy are on the hilltop, with homes in the background.

This trail was made for walking.

The family walks down the rocky area of the hill.

Turtle Rock Viewpoint Trail

- Irvine

Hello again!

This month we are going to take a short walk in Irvine. The trail is actually behind an elementary school. If you go on the weekend, you can find parking right in front of the school. The trail is very short but the view is amazing! Once you get to the top you can see 360 degrees. It's so relaxing; I stayed up there for at least 30 minutes. In addition to the view, you can actually walk in a circle around the area and get different perspectives.

Let's begin!

The Trail: We arrived and walked through the Bonita Canyon Elementary School, which is connected to the Chaparral Park. The park is closed from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m.

Once we got to the trailhead there were a few paved flights of stairs to take. After that we left the pavement. Immediately we were in front of a decent-sized hill. It may look intimidating at first, but it was very easily scaled (to the top) and not difficult at all.

After we reached the summit we could see over most of Irvine. This would be a good place to have lunch with friends or family.

Then we continued on the trail, which goes around in a loop. It was mostly grassy surroundings. After the loop was completed, we went back down the rocky side of the trail and continued to the stairs, which lead to Chaparral Park. It was only 2.7 miles round trip and a 250-foot gain in elevation. It took us approximately an hour and a half to complete the round trip.

The trail is very easy; the most difficult part was climbing the rocky section, which again was not very steep. Bring some sunblock because there is no shade along the trail, or at least wear a hat. And lastly, always bring water to keep you hydrated.

I recommend this trail for the families and also for anyone who just wants to go out and enjoy an amazing view.

Until next month, be safe and "Be Alive!"

Alive! AROUND THE WORLD

1 Irwindale

Capt. Michael Barnes, Harbor, stepped back in time when he visited the Renaissance Faire at the Santa Fe Dam Recreation Area.

"Oh how we love the Renaissance Faire," Michael writes. "Every year we make our pilgrimage to the faire, which over time has changed. Now it's more family oriented.

But still a great place to bring your friends and family, and it's only about an hour drive from LA.

"My wife and my friends all dress up as Elizabethan peasants, as that's part of the fun, but you will also see an assortment of people in costumes from different eras and dimensions, like bearded Vikings, strange green fairies, Star Trek voyagers, pirates, and even Batman and Robin.

"Our favorite shows are 'Moonie the Magnificent,' who has a very dry sarcastic wit; the Dread Crew of Oddwood (Elizabethan heavy metal band), and the jousting, of course, with all the cheering (children young and old love this show). We enjoy the bawdiness of the Belles of Bedlam and other saucy wenches acts, you may even get invited to join them on stage, as I did.

"Tip: Prepay your ticket online (during the sale), and you will not have to wait in the long line for ticket booth."

Brush Fire Season

California continues to experience a long-lasting drought, and the hot weather raises questions again about how to protect against brush fires.

Brush Fires: A Big Deal
Brush fires cause over $1 billion worth of damages every year and destroy thousands of homes.

If you live in an area that is highly susceptible to brush fires, then you are already aware of this danger. The good news is that there are precautionary measures you can take to keep your family and home safe. Please read on to make sure you are prepared and to understand the steps that might just keep you safe.

Have a Plan
It is always good, no matter where you live, for your family to have an emergency kit and an emergency plan that all members of your family understand. Some water, medical supplies, food, flashlights and extra clothing or blankets could be very important in the event of a fire or earthquake.

Having a kit is important, but it's even more important for every member of your family to know how to communicate with each other in the event of an emergency, what to do and where to go. Give some attention to this simple instruction, and it could save lives in the future.

Prepare your Home and Yard
Design and landscape your home with wildfire safety in mind. Select materials and plants that can help contain fire rather than fuel it.

Use fire-resistant or noncombustible materials on the roof and exterior structure of the dwelling, or treat wood or combustible material used in roofs, siding, decking or trim with fire-retardant chemicals evaluated by a nationally recognized laboratory, such as Underwriters Laboratories (UL).

Plant fire-resistant shrubs and trees. For example, hardwood trees are less flammable than pine, evergreen, eucalyptus or fir trees.

Regularly clean roof and gutters.

Inspect chimneys at least twice a year. Clean them at least once a year. Keep the dampers in good working order. Equip chimneys and stovepipes with a spark arrester that meets the requirements of National Fire Protection Association Standard 211. (Contact your local fire department for exact specifications.)

Use 1/8-inch mesh screen beneath porches, decks, floor areas and the home itself. Also, screen openings to floors, roof and attic.

Install a dual-sensor smoke alarm on each level of your home, especially near bedrooms; test monthly and change the batteries at least once each year.

Teach each family member how to use a fire extinguisher (ABC type) and show them where it's kept.

Keep handy household items that can be used as fire tools: a rake, axe, handsaw or chainsaw, bucket and shovel.

Keep a ladder that will reach the roof. Consider installing protective shutters or heavy fire-resistant drapes.

Clear items that will burn from around the house, including woodpiles, lawn furniture, barbecue grills, tarp coverings, etc. Move them outside of your defensible space.

Water! Water! Water!
Identify and maintain an adequate outside water source, such as a small pond, cistern, well, swimming pool or hydrant.

Have a garden hose that is long enough to reach any area of the home and other structures on the property.

Install freeze-proof exterior water outlets on at least two sides of the home and near other structures on the property. Install additional outlets at least 50 feet from the home.

Consider obtaining a portable gasoline-powered pump in case electrical power is cut off.

Local college-bound recipients of the Los Angeles Federal Credit Union (LAFCU) 2016 Jack C. Mathews College Scholarship competition were named at a special reception in their honor June 14. The nine winners, who are headed to a university in the fall, were each awarded $1,000 by John Dea, LAFCU's President/CEO at the credit union's Glendale branch. Parents or grandparents of the winners, close friends, members of the scholarship committee, and LAFCU managers and staff were in attendance at the reception.

Selected from nearly 40 applicants, the winners are Ben Blanco, Cheyenne Lira, Kate Margheritis, Ashley Tripp, Gabriel Zendejas, Kara Mfume, Natalie Diaz, Lily Toyoma and Morgan Moore. The winners plan to attend Cal Poly Pomona; Cal State Fullerton; Hampton University in Virginia; Rocky Mountain College in Montana; San Diego State; University of Nevada, Reno; University of California, Riverside; University of Wisconsin, Madison; and the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania.

Applicants were evaluated on their academic transcripts, letters of recommendation, extracurricular activities, community service, and an essay or self-made 15 or 30-second video on the topic "Why is LAFCU More LA Than Your Bank?" The question is a promotional tagline currently used by the credit union that focuses on the advantages of banking with LAFCU versus banks. A total of 33 essays and six videos were submitted to the credit union, and this was the first year applicants could submit a video instead of an essay.

Established by LAFCU's charity, LACA, the scholarship program is designed to help young members pay for their education and achieve their goals. It is named in honor of the late Jack C. Mathews, a former active and longstanding LAFCU Board member. Anyone who lives in most counties of Southern California can join LAFCU and take advantage of its financial services. For details, visit www.LAFCU.org; call (877) MY LAFCU (695-2328); or visit a branch.

A Pension Study Of 3 Governments

Legislative Report: Pension Law and Policy, By Michael Karsch

Arizona ... Puerto Rico ... Brazil: What do these governments have in common?
They each try to provide reasonable retirement benefits for their government workers and face a need to change various provisions in their funding of such. But there are differences, too: Arizona has achieved considerable reform, but Puerto Rico and Brazil face monumental debt problems that stem from their pension systems.
Arizona voters approved Proposition 124 in mid-May to strengthen their Public Safety Personnel Retirement System. Backed by the Legislature and organized labor, this will lower increases in retiree benefits and alter the way in which cost of living increases (a cap of two percent) are paid to retirees. Over the next 30 years, this will save $1.5 billion for the pension systems. The unfunded liability of the state systems was at only 50 percent. The costs of hiring had become so high that some cities in Arizona were curtailing new hires. This is a constitutional amendment. There was opposition by the Arizona Tax Research Association and the Goldwater Institute. The measure will be litigated before the Arizona Supreme Court.

The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico has been in the news for months about its impending doomsday when they cannot pay their bondholders. A bailout measure (or sorts) is moving through Congress, with the acquiescence of the White House. This would restructure the commonwealth's $72 billion debt by a federal oversight board, which was done previously by Congress for the debt problem of the District of Columbia in the 1990s. The board would consist of two members appointed by the Speaker of the House, two by the Senate President pro tem, one from the minority leader of the House, one from the minority leader of the Senate, and one by the President, all to be set up and functioning before Jan. 1, 2017. The board's actions may preempt conflicting laws and regulations of Puerto Rico. Legal challenges to the board's actions will be heard in federal courts, not in the Commonwealth courts. Of the $72 billion in debt, approximately $46 billion is due to the pension system. Reforms have already been made in raising the retirement age, increasing worker contributions, and shifting employees to a hybrid plan. The new fiscal plans must provide adequate funding for the pension systems and also respect creditor priorities and be "in the best interest of creditors." This is a compromise worked out by both parties in Congress.

The United States of Brazil (yes, the official name) is in turmoil after impeaching their President, Dilma Rousseff, on charges of graft, corruption and bribery (a trial will soon take place). The acting president, Michel Temer, is tackling a prominent part of the country's financial disaster, the pension systems. These systems are currently short of adequate funding by $37 billion, a 47 percent increase over the 2015 deficit. In 2017 the shortfall is expected to be 66 percent. As a whole, Brazil spends 41 percent of its budget on pensions, while the United States of America stands at 24 percent. Standard & Poors has reduced Brazil's credit rating to junk status. The individual Brazilian states are doing no better; the State of Rio de Janeiro delayed pension payments to 137,000 pensioners in April for lack of funds. And the Olympics are coming to Brazil this summer?

LACERS' Update

Mary Beetz

BY MARY BEETZ

Health Plan Eligibility Audit

LACERS was to conduct a health plan dependent eligibility verification audit in June. The audit was to ensure that current covered dependents were still eligible for coverage. LACERS was working with HMS, an audit firm, on this project.

LACERS wants to make sure that the dollars spent on health benefits for our Members are being used in accordance with our governing codes and rules. In addition, the audit will assist us in validating our current health enrollment and family status change processes. Our goal is to make the process as easy as possible for you.

If you are covering a dependent in a LACERS health plan, you were to receive a letter from HMS asking you to verify your dependents' status. If you have any questions about dependent eligibility for LACERS health plans, please refer to page 4 of your 2016 Health Benefits Guide. You may also view the guide online at www.LACERS.org at the bottom of the Retired Member page. LACERS will provide more details about the audit in the coming months.

Cost of Living Adjustment for 2016

By May of each year, the LACERS Board of Administration is required to determine the consumer price index (CPI) for the Los Angeles area to provide a cost of living adjustment (COLA) to eligible retirees and beneficiaries. The Administrative Code states that the COLA cannot exceed three percent annually for Tier 1 Members. When the CPI is greater than three percent, the difference is "banked" for future years. When the CPI is less than three percent, LACERS then uses available "banked" amounts to increase the COLA to the maximum three percent. Just how much of a COLA that a retired Member will receive depends on the retirement date and how much is "banked" from previous years.

In 2016, the CPI for the Los Angeles area is .9 percent. The LACERS Board of Administration adopted the cost-of-living adjustments for eligible retired Members and beneficiaries, effective July 1, at their Feb. 9 meeting. This COLA will be included in your July 31 check or direct deposit. All Members who retired after June 30, 2015, will receive a COLA of 1/12th of 0.9 percent for each full month of retirement completed by June 30.

Some Pensioners Are A Tale of the Numbers

LARFPA

Lee Kebler

In May, Venita Picinich, 109 years old, passed away. She was the oldest member of the Los Angeles Fire and Police Pension System. Venita, a fire widow whose husband died in 1984, enjoyed the Fire Relief Association's holiday party last year and meeting many of the Fire families in attendance. Our next oldest pensioner is a Police widow, Florence Kinney, 104. All survivors older than 100 are widows or dependent children of Firefighters or Police Officers.

The oldest sworn member of the system is retired Fireman Delbert Jones. He was born Feb. 17, 1916, was appointed to the Fire Dept.

in 1941 and retired after 29 years of service in 1970. The oldest retired Police Officer (just one month younger), Lindo Giacomuzzin, born April 1, 1916, was appointed to the LAPD in 1942 and retired in 1964. What is unique about retirees appointed after World War II was they were told their life expectancy after retirement was seven or eight years. Look how our oldest retirees defied those odds. Life expectancy for those borne in the 1920s was 57.6 years for men and 60.6 years for women. Today, life expectancy for men is 78.5 years and women 83.2 years. There are 338 people older than 90 on our pension rolls.

During this era, there were three to four active employees to help pay the pension cost for each beneficiary. As the Departments' manpower grew and then stabilized, beneficiary population continued to grow at a faster rate until now there is about one active employee for each beneficiary. Soon we will have more beneficiaries on the pension rolls than we have active employees. According to the last annual pension report, there are 13,068 active Firefighters and Police Officers employed, and 12,593 beneficiaries in the Pension System. It's something to think about.

Orangutans in Borneo

Hal and Co. head to Southeast Asia for a 21-day land tour. Part 5

In April and May 2015, Hal and Evelyn took a land tour of Southeast Asia, starting in Bangkok and including Cambodia, Laos, Vietnam, Malaysia and Taiwan. In each place they hired a private car and guide, except for Taiwan.

2013 Club Excellence Award Recipient

By Hal Danowitz, Secretary, RLCEI

Borneo, May 2, 2015: It's orangutan day for Evelyn. As soon as we landed in Sandakan, Malaysia, Borneo, we went to the orangutan feeding platforms at the Sepilok Nature Resort. More on that in a minute.

The drive back to the Kuala Lumpur airport seemed quicker that morning, although we almost had a very bad accident when we came around a blind curve and found a stalled car in our lane; part of the problem was a very large bus next to us. Whatever our driver did we made it through and got to the airport.

The staff at the airport was very helpful, and they seemed to have a great respect for older people. We made it through the process and the flight left on time, and we arrived in Sandakan at 1:15 p.m. as scheduled. I stopped counting the flights, but I knew by the time we got home we will have been on 11 separate flights. No wonder the bag is getting heavy.

Borneo is an island divided into three countries: Malaysia in the north, Indonesia in the south and Brunei. Malaysian Borneo takes up a little more than half of the entire island.

We arrived at Sepilok Nature Resort just after 2 p.m. We checked in and just had time to use the bathroom before we had to leave for the platform for the 3 p.m. feeding. This center rehabilitates orangutans to reintroduce them to the wild and return them to their natural habitat. We spent about one and half hours observing the orangutans. The animals were allowed to roam free within this area, which included our resort. On the way to our cabin there was one in the tree just outside our door. We had to be careful because some could become aggressive.

The resort had 23 cabins and reminded me of the resort we stayed in at in George, South Africa. It was a very pretty setting with long wooden walkways and a lake in the middle. There was no Internet in the room, but it was available in the lobby. The resort was in a beautiful setting, but it was not five stars. The next day we planned to see the 10 a.m. feeding.

Both Evelyn and I were still having stomach problems, so we rested after our visit and didn't go to dinner until 7 p.m. Both of us were trying to keep our strength up, so we forced ourselves to eat. We both figured it was caused by something we picked up in Vietnam.

We had scheduled a river cruise and overnight stay in the rainforest after the next day's morning feeding. But not feeling well we decided to cancel that part of our trip, and I extended our stay here by one night.

The next day, May 3, we didn't eat much for breakfast, and Evelyn decided to skip the morning orangutan feeding, but I felt well enough to go. I was with a group of two newlywed couples and a family from Holland. They were all very nice people – the two young men from Holland were very helpful to me because they thought I was old, which I'm sure I looked. That morning's feeding did not draw as many animals as the day before's, but I had a good spot and got lots of good pictures and video. Afterward we walked to a protected preserve for sun bears and got a few pictures. Sun bears look like black bears, only smaller. I got back to our cabin and Evelyn was still down for the count. She promised to try to rally for lunch.

The tour company was scheduled to pick us up the next day for our flight to Kota Kinabalu, where we would spend two nights.

Later that day, both of us felt better. I had a light lunch and Evelyn managed to get down a piece of toast. I ordered the toast when I went for lunch. There was no toast on the lunch menu, so I from a number of African, and other, countries. We found a small one that we added to the collection.

We stopped at the Botanical Gardens and took a walk through the tropical rain forest before visiting the gardens. The walk in the rain forest reminded me of the walk we took in Costa Rica. It was very wet and muddy; I was better prepared (with my walking stick) than was Princess Evelyn, but she came though like a real trooper. I used my walking stick, which really helped with my balance as we climbed up and down the trail. The garden walk was more exercise – there weren't many flowers.

Our final stop and lunch was at the Hot Spring Park. These were natural freshwater springs. The park had at least a dozen bathing pools, and we saw a number of families in their own bath pool. It was in fact a "public bath," free of charge. Our guide told us the hot springs came out at about 150 degrees fahrenheit. There was also a cold tap at each bath. We decided to not try it.

We had lunch at the spring, a typical Malaysian lunch, at least seven courses. It was very filling and too much food. It started to rain and we started our drive back to the city. We were always on the lookout for a restroom, and the ones we found here were very clean.

Just remember that there may or may not be toilet paper in the stall; sometimes it was on the way in or not at all. I would suggest little packets of Kleenex. At the spring there was an attendant who kept the bathroom clean. I offered her a tip on the way out but she wouldn't take it.

We left for the city about 2 p.m. and got to the hotel around 4:30 p.m. KK City had a number of Starbucks, so we stopped for mugs. The store didn't have a city mug, but we got a set of five that covered some of the Malaysian states.

At the hotel we took pictures of the sunset and then had the international buffet dinner. The cost was $32 per person – great value, and the food was good, too.

We were scheduled to leave the next day for Taipei. We were being picked up at 3:40 p.m. I asked the front desk for a late checkout so we didn't have to sit in the lobby for three hours.

Next month we will finish our trip with our visit to Taipei. ■ had to explain to the limited-English waitress that I wanted just toast, with no sandwich. I felt like Jack Nicholson in Five Easy Pieces.

We sat on the lodge patio for about an hour in the afternoon and again in the evening. There was no Internet reception in the rooms, but near the patios it was strong. The area was very tropical and lush. The night sky was full of stars and we heard the sounds of birds and animals. So far there were very few bugs.

On May 4, both of us felt much better, me a little more so than Evelyn. That morning we flew to Kota Kinabalu for two nights, which will finish our time in Borneo. The next day we had a full day excursion to Kinabalu National Park, and I hoped we would be up to it.

At checkout I was surprised at my bill. Because we stayed an extra night I had to pay for it. I thought it was $235 for the extra night, but it turned out to be $235, which is like $68. The total bill, including food and drink, was just more than $100.

We were picked up at 10:30 a.m. and arrived in Kota Kinabalu at 1:30 p.m. This was a resort city of around 600,000 people right on the South China Sea. We stayed at the Shangri-La's Tanjung Aru Resort and Spa, another five-star resort.

I felt fully recovered, and Evelyn felt close to it – I could tell she was feeling better because she was complaining again, about the three hours flying in coach.

We had dinner at Coco's and Joe's Bar and Grill, part of the hotel. It was located on the ocean side, and we had an amazing view of the sun setting over the South China Sea. I felt hungry for the first time in a number of days, but Evelyn was about a day behind me.

The next day, May 5, we drove to the Kinabalu Park, a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Our guide and driver, Nick, picked us up at 7:30 a.m. The park is 88 km from Kota Kinabalu (the locals call it KK City), and the drive though morning traffic and the two-lane mountain road took at least two and half hours. Our first stop was about an hour in, to take pictures of Mt. Kinabalu, the highest mountain in Southeast Asia; it's about 14,000 feet high. Our guide was smart because we got some very good shots of the mountain; in the afternoon on the way back to the hotel, it was covered with clouds. Evelyn was able to buy a few things from local vendors. There was no pressure, and it was a nice experience. Some of you know we collect tribal masks

'Dem Bones, 'dem Bones, 'dem Healthy Bones!

An Overview of Osteoporosis

What is osteoporosis?

On May 25 LACERS Well hosted its third annual Wellness Extravaganza, Move Well to be Well, at the Airtel Plaza Hotel in Van Nuys. Osteoporosis was one of the topics covered at the event by the keynote speaker, Dr. Erik Book, West Regional Medical Director, UnitedHealthcare Medicare and Retirement. Since many of you were unable to attend, I would like to touch upon osteoporosis in this "Ask the Rd" column.

Osteoporosis means "porous bone" and occurs in more than 10 million Americans. A frequent cause of broken bones among women and men over 50, it often goes undetected until a fracture occurs, which can then lead to more serious complications due to immobility, surgical risks and a compromised immune system. Thankfully, osteoporosis is not only preventable, it can also improve significantly with simple lifestyle changes like a diet rich in calcium, walking regularly, and in more prolonged cases, medical management.

Although some bone loss is normal as we age, not everyone will develop osteoporosis. There are some uncontrollable risk factors that should be considered and discussed with your doctor to determine if early testing is right for you including, being over 50, early- or post-menopause, a family history of osteoporosis, low body weight, and broken bones or significant height loss (occurring after 50). Additionally, conditions such as Type 1 diabetes, rheumatoid arthritis, inflammatory bowel disease, and hormonal disorders are also linked to bone loss.

If these risk factors are present, your doctor will likely recommend a DEXA (dual X-ray absorptiometry) scan, which measures bone density. Although osteoporosis involves the whole body, the scan focuses on two main areas, the hip and spine, and uses a measurement, or T-score, to predict likelihood of fractures at other sites. The DEXA scan is painless and takes about 10 to 20 minutes.

Luckily, there are things you can control, and you're never too old (or too young) to improve the health of your bones. Some tips include the following:

- Get enough calcium and vitamin D, and eat a well-balanced diet. The average person over 50 needs 1,000-1,200 mg of calcium, and 800-1,000 units of vitamin D per day. To find out information on foods rich in calcium and/or vitamin D, please visit www.nof.org
- Engage in regular, weight-bearing exercise. Weight bearing refers to any activity that can be done while standing, which promotes new cell growth in bone. It is recommended that adults get 150 minutes of exercise each week. Strength training and balance exercises like yoga and Tai Chi do not assist with bone growth, but are also helpful because they protect the bone, aid in flexibility, and decrease the risk of falls.

- Avoid smoking and limit alcohol to one or two drinks per day. Both alcohol and smoking significantly decrease the absorption of calcium.
- Cut back on sodium and caffeine intake. Salt can cause excessive calcium excretion in the bones. Approximately six grams of calcium is lost with every 100 mg of caffeine ingested.

In some cases, lifestyle improvements alone may not be enough to adequately reduce or revert bone loss. Various medications are available to improve the health and strength of bones by increasing the body's ability to grow bone, regulate calcium and phosphorous, and/or decrease the availability of osteoclasts, which cause bone breakdown. There are several factors to consider when discussing your treatment plan with your doctor, including current medications being taken, level of pain (if any) and potential side effects, but since bone growth takes time, medications should be taken as directed, for the indicated length of time, for optimal improvement.

7:50 – 8:50 p.m.

The Observatory offers a sunset hike led by a Park Ranger and a museum guide. The easy walk starts on the Observatory's West Terrace, proceeds up the Charlie Turner trail to the Berlin Forest on the hill just north of the Observatory, and then returns to the West Terrace. The distance covered is about half a mile over the course of an hour at a very moderate pace with stops along the way to discuss the highlights and history of Griffith Park, and objects visible in the evening sky.

NOTE: The Charlie Turner trail is a moderately steep earthen trail. The Observatory recommends footwear appropriate for hiking.

Lotus Festival Blooms Again

The Lotus Festival, one of the signature cultural celebrations in the City, is ready to bloom again July 9-10 at Echo Park.

The festival returned two years ago after a three-year absence; during the interim, Echo Park Lake, the festival's location, was refurbished.

Dates coincide with the blooming of the lotus flower. Admission is free.

The festival attracts an estimated 100,000 people.

This year's 36th annual Lotus Festival celebrates Asian Pacific cultures with two days of attractions and entertainment in scenic Echo Lake Park. The weekend kick offs with an opening ceremony, continuing with live music, a film screening, cultural performances and more. Teams compete in the colorful Dragon Boat Race on the lake, and there are martial arts demonstrations and dance showcases, both traditional and contemporary. Each year, the festival focuses on a different ethnicity within the Asian Pacific region. This year, the festival will honor the culture and traditions of the Korean community.

The event made its debut in 1972 as the "Day of the Lotus" and takes place in July to coincide with the blooming of the lotus flowers that are cultivated in the lake beds by City crews. The celebration was designed to promote awareness of the contributions by Asian Americans in our local communities.

In 2012-13, the Lotus Festival was placed on hold while the City embarked on a major Prop O stormwater improvement project, as detailed in the August 2013 edition of Alive! The voter-mandated restoration helped protect water quality, enhance the Los Angeles River watershed, and maintain flood control functionality.

According to the Echo Park Historical Society, the Echo Park Lake lotus beds are considered to be the largest in the Western United States.

The Lotus Festival is a program of the Los Angeles Lotus Festival, Inc., in collaboration with Rec and Parks.

John's comment:

Hi Sarah
– this is another wonderful picture! I really like the angle of this photo – it gives the Bristlecone an air of stature and authority. And after being around 5,000
years, it should have all the authority we can give it. I have always wanted to go see the Bristlecone pines. One day I will have to venture out that way and see them for myself.

"I would like to share my

was sunny and raining, so I grabbed my camera and drove to the other side of San Pedro to see if I could capture a good rainbow

In spite of the wires, you have to take the shot! If you could have followed the rainbow to the ground
it would have landed on the eternal flame for JFK

– John Nance,
Retired, DWP

John's comment:

Awesome picture, John – and you are right, this is definitely a once-in-a-lifetime shot!

"This is a picture of the Arlington Garden in Pasadena taken near sunset. It is definitely a

– Linda Wang, Airports

John's comment: Hi Linda – these are beautiful photos! I especially like how you were able to get the light bursting through the branches of the tree. It makes all the difference! Thanks so much, and after everyone sees your picture, it might not be so secret anymore :)

"'ET Comes Home' – The Space Shuttle's external tank (aka ET) makes its way home to the California Science Center."

John's comment: It's truly amazing how moving huge objects like these and the Space Shuttle are accomplished. Thank you, Karen, for capturing a little bit of LA history!

News from Sports Leagues

FROM THE COMMISH:

Anticipation Is Building For Club Softball 2016!

If you're a Club Member, your Wednesdays at work are pretty typical. But if you're a Club Member who plays as part of the Club Softball League, your Wednesdays are very different, and exciting.

It goes something like this:

On a normal overcast Wednesday morning, a City Employees Club Member goes to work after packing a regular cotton T-shirt with a number on the back, plastic cleats, an aluminum bat, a leather glove and bottled water in their trunk. That Club Member then spends hour after hour anticipating what is to come that evening. After completing the last assignment for the day, the Club Member locks their cubicle drawers, logs off their computer, grabs their personal items, takes the long walk to their vehicle and fights the typical California traffic.

With only a few more traffic lights to pass, the Club Member feels a sigh of relief for the park is in sight, and they let go all of the stress of the day. This is what it is like to be a Club Softball player on Wednesdays!

That's how it is for me, and I'm sure I'm not alone.

The park, that fun-filled place where Club Members gather Wednesday nights to enjoy a safe but competitive game of softball, is either Shatto or Downey Recreation Center. Club Members look forward to their opportunity to hit the ball, run the bases, catch a fly ball, tag a runner out and make an outstanding play that cannot be easily replicated. Loud cheers from the crowd can be heard, team mascots run up and down the foul lines, and the Sports Dude tosses Club merchandise and gifts to the fans.

You want to join, now, don't you? Come on out and join us for the fun!

This season, approximately 15 teams (13 returning teams, one free-agent team and one new team) will compete in three divisions (that's up from two last year), starting on Wed., July 13, at approximately 7 p.m. For the last two seasons, the free agents' teams – Club Members who have signed up to play as individuals are placed on free-agent teams – have competed in the playoffs.

Each season, all-star games are held right before the playoffs. Club Members invite their teams, family, co-workers and friends out to the park to cheer them on as they participate on their respective team of selected most valuable players. Players from all teams have an opportunity to further network and possibly create new friendships.

Let's get this season started by filling the seats at Shatto and Downey parks July 13! Seasonal fans will welcome you as you share a kind evening of friendly banter or common ovation. This is a very small world, really friendly world: I have seen Club Members that I recognize from the softball league while I'm shopping in other cities, playing in other tournaments or leagues, at the movies, and during promotional examinations. It's a great group of people just waiting for you!

Come out, meet new people and introduce yourself to the players, umpires, scorekeepers and passersby. Enhance your networks while enjoying a wonderful evening in the park with kind people. I'll see you there!

The Smart Move

BY PATRICK MILLER, CBLIFE,
The Club's Insurance Partner

Five Critical Steps as Retirement Nears

If you're within five years of retirement, don't procrastinate. Five years may seem like a long time, but it goes fast. And research shows those who start planning at least five years out have a happier retirement! There is nothing to lose and only happiness to gain by taking the following five short-term retirement planning steps as soon as possible.

1. Increase cash reserves.

Applying for pensions and Social Security, as well as setting up withdrawals from IRAs and 401(k) plans, takes time and paperwork. Things can get delayed, and you may not always get your first pension check on time, so you want to plan for a glitch or two along the way.

2. Estimate how much money you need to retire.

To decide if you have enough to retire, you must develop an accurate estimate of the amount of money you spend, and the amount of income you will have each month.

Although boring, this is the most important retirement planning step you can take.

Start with a yellow pad and write down your current take-home pay and your current monthly expenses. Don't forget about variable costs like hobbies, home improvements, and vehicle repairs.

Then write down the monthly income that will be available from pensions, Social Security and IRA/401(k) withdrawals. Is this number close to your current take-home pay? If not, you have four choices: spend less in retirement, save more now, work a few extra years, or earn a higher rate of return on your investments.

3. Evaluate tax consequences.

Will you be in a lower tax bracket in a few years? Then be sure to maximize tax-deductible contributions now. Retirees routinely underestimate the amount of taxes they will pay in retirement. A little planning in this area can keep you out of major trouble later on.

4. Diversify your investments.

Watching your portfolio go up and then back down again is never enjoyable, but in the end, as long as you end up with a big enough pot of money, it doesn't really matter how you got there.

Once you are retired, however, it's a different story. When you are taking regular withdrawals from a portfolio, volatility has a much greater impact. This is something us retirement planners call sequence risk. Reducing the up's and down's can significantly increase the odds that your money will last through your life expectancy.

Spend time figuring out what mix of investments will achieve the rate of return you need while having a level or risk that is reasonable for you. The risk/return characteristics of your portfolio will determine how much income you will have, and how long it will last.

5. Educate yourself.

Although it is advisable to seek professional guidance, the truth is no one will ever care about your money as much as you do. Take the time to learn about retirement planning and investing.

You'll want to learn about investing approaches that affect the distribution phase in retirement as it is quite different than the accumulation phase. And throw out old beliefs like "annuities aren't good" or "reverse mortgages are bad." Approach your planning with an open mind and with the goal of making sure your income is secure. This approach will lead you to make more appropriate choices than if your focus is on getting the highest rate of return.

Some suggestions: attend an investment class at the local community college take an online investment class, read books, and use the internet to learn. You spent a significant amount of your life earning this money; now it's time to learn how it will earn for you.

Joe Govea, 25 years of City service, wearing his original World War II Army dress uniform, including his beloved combat infantry badge.

U.S. ARMY

INDEPENDENCE DAY 2016

Building and Safety

Honor and Duty

Joe Govea, 91, Retired, Building and Safety, and former Rifleman, First Infantry Division, United States Army, nearly paid the ultimate price for freedom. Here's his tale of sacrifice and service, and his call to remember those whose stories are fading into history.

In 1944, Joe Govea, 18, left San Fernando to step courageously into the horrors of World War II – events he still hesitates to recall today. After nearly two years in Europe, he came back, he came back to California a different person. He was recovering from a seriously wounded left hip ... and he was sometimes angry, solitary and short with people, despite a resounding Allied victory to which he contributed significantly.

Joe went on to create a successful City career in Building and Safety, raise a family, and grow friendships with those with whom he served – people like himself who understood what it was like to face death at least twice, and probably more often than they want to tell. Joe's a living example of what it means to serve.

He's been awarded with the Purple Heart and several other medals, from at least two countries, but the honor that means the most to him is the Rifleman's badge that you cannot get if you have not seen actual combat.

As we celebrate freedom in this month of Independence Day, Alive! salutes Joe Govea, 91, proud Club Member; those soldiers who served this country in any of its conflicts; and those soldiers who saw battle and uniquely know his triumph. ■

Joe's World, Circa 1944

Here's a brief note and map about the Hürtgen Forest, the location of the battle where Joe was seriously wounded. The battle, one of the fiercest in U.S. military history yet not well known, is considered part of the Battle of the Bulge in World War II.

The Battle of Hürtgen Forest was a series of fierce battles fought from Sept. 19, 1944 to Feb. 10, 1945 between U.S. and German forces. The Hürtgen Forest starts about 50 miles east of the Belgian–German border. The battle was the longest on German ground during World War II, and is the longest single battle the U.S. Army has ever fought. Joe Govea was shot in the left hip Dec. 20, 1944 in the Hürtgen Forest; for his sacrifice, he was awarded the Purple Heart. ■

The Alive! Interview

‘Freedom – the Only Thing in the World’

On May 6, the Alive! team – John Hawkins, Club CEO; Summy Lam, Club Director of Marketing; and John Burnes, Alive! editor – visited with Joe Govea, Retired, Principal Building Mechanical Inspector, Building and Safety, 25 years of City service, and his wife, Shirley, at their Northridge home. We thank them for their welcome and graciousness through some difficult memories.

Joe was born in North Hollywood, went to elementary school at San Fernando Elementary and then San Fernando High School through the tenth grade. After that he worked on a farm before being drafted in the Army in 1944. He retired from the City in May 1990.

Thanks for telling us your stories, Joe. Before we get too far into your experiences in World War II, let's talk about your City career.

Joe Govea: Sure.

Where did you start with the City? What was your title when you started?

I started as a Building Inspector with the city, and then I went to work at the zoning counter as a Zoning Analyst. Then I went to Investigations at the Investigation Division, and then I worked for the Conservation Bureau. After that I came back to the Building Bureau. I was promoted to Senior Inspector, and then Principal in the Van Nuys office.

Did you enjoy your time with the City?

Yes, very much so.

What did you love about it?

I liked the idea of being able to help the City's environment, and also help people better themselves, to get out of blight, and just do good public relations, in spite of the fact that I was an enforcement officer.

What did you do between getting out of the service and joining the City?

I quit high school in tenth grade, and I went up north to work in a ranch as a ranch hand to help support my family because it was after the Depression. Things were tough, and I decided to help my family.

Where was that?

Manteca, just south of Stockton.

Honor and Duty

After you got out of the Army, what did you do for employment before you started with the City?

I went into construction, and I took classes. I went to school under the GI Bill to learn construction as a whole, because my dream had always been to build my own house. I come from a very poor environment, and housing was terrible – my dad during the Depression lost everything, so we were jumping from house to house. I said, “I don’t want that.” The City was willing to send me to UCLA to go into construction, and I told them, “I’m a high school dropout. How can you get me into a school?” the interviewer said, “We’ll worry about that. We can do it.” So apparently I got a very high grade in the interview. I went to night school for ten years. Then I went into construction and I did very well, and I got my contractor’s license. I built my house in North Hills when I was 25 years old, and married after that.

You were 40 years old when you joined the City.

About 40, yes.

You did quite a bit before you joined the City.

Yes. I was a successful contractor and I joined the City on a lark.

I had a lot of projects on schedule. And then one morning I woke up at about three o’clock with a terrible pain in my side. It was my kidneys. And one of the contractors came to me and he said, “You know, the City wants inspectors.” I said, “Not me.”

Why not? What changed your mind?

My wife’s pressure. She said, “Joe, you’re getting old. You had surgery. You’re not able to do this. Take it.” So I did. My first check for two weeks was less than I used to make during one week as a contractor. I said, “This isn’t going to work.” She said, “Stick with it.” Sometimes you have to listen to your wife.

I was very successful in construction, and I think one of the biggest compliments I got when I walked into the City office, Inspector

Joe Govea (left) tells the story about seeing the Statue of Liberty on his way back to the United States at the end of the war. Listening are John Hawkins, Club CEO (center) and John Burnes, Alive! editor.

Sorensen, who was one of the best inspectors there in Van Nuys, came over and shook my hand. He said, “You’ll be a good inspector. I’m not the most popular inspector,” he said. “But I’m the most respected. You seem to be the same.”

That’s what made you a really good inspector – you’d been there. You’d been a contractor.

Yes.

Welcome to the War

Were you enlisted, or were you drafted?

I was drafted.

How old were you when you were drafted?

Eighteen. I was inducted with five of my buddies. I like to remember the pleasant things. We got on the bus as school buddies – and the guys are singing and very happy. We were inducted the same day. We trained at Camp Roberts together, in Paso Robles.

After we finished training, we were deployed. One of the fellows, David Gonzalez, suffered an appendectomy after training and he was taken to the hospital. He was killed in the Luzon landing in the Philippines and was awarded the Medal of Honor. Another guy was a son of a Mexican grocery store owner, and he was a prisoner of war. Two of us were wounded, and one went through it unscathed. We were all riflemen.

Have you stayed in touch with any of them?

They’re all gone.

Did the Army give you a choice of what you wanted to do?

No. They didn’t even give you a choice on your haircut!

When were you drafted?

Just prior to the Normandy landing. I was with the First Infantry Division, which landed in North Africa, then Sicily, and then led the Normandy invasion. I was drafted in March and the Normandy invasion was in June.

What was your entry point into the European theater?

Glasgow, Scotland. We went by boat, escorted by a convoy of ships that were all blacked out.

Because of the German submarines in the Atlantic.

Yes. I went to Europe on the Ile de France. It was the third largest boat in the world at the time, after the Queen Mary and the Queen Elizabeth. It was packed. Before that I traveled from Ford Ord in California, to Camp Shanks in New York by train, which was also blacked out. And then I was taken by boat to Glasgow. From Glasgow we came down to the English Channel.

You went through Normandy?

I went through Normandy, but I was not at the landing.

After it had been secured.

After the invasion, yes. After it had been secured.

How soon after?

I was trying to remember. I know my brother’s first daughter was born in July, and I know I was gone overseas, so it must have been around July or August.

My brother-in-law was in the Normandy landing, and when people asked him about it, all he would say was, “There were a lot of bodies floating on the sea.” He wouldn’t say anything else.

So where in France did you land?

Either Cherbourg or Le Havre, but I think it was Cherbourg, France, in the Normandy area. There are two ports there. I went in one and out the other, but I don’t remember which is which. I didn’t give it much importance. I was just a kid.

Scotland – that’s the first time I’d had tea with milk. I thought it was coffee.

And then we went through Northern France and Belgium. The First Division, we were the first ones to cross the German border and take the first big German city, Aachen. I never knew where I was because everywhere I went was destruction. I hear stories about guys who say, “Well, at six o’clock we were here.” I don’t remember. I don’t want to remember, number one. But I knew where we were because I had heard of the Siegfried line, the line on the German border. They were pillars with a flat top, and they were there to stop the tanks from crossing into Germany. We blew some of them up to go through.

The Wounding

So you were in Germany at that point?

Right outside of Aachen. We were on rest and recreation. We were replaced because we were on R&R, and I always wonder about this.

Wonder if that’s why the Germans pushed back?

Right – two of our soldiers were replaced by one soldier right around Malmedy, right at the breakthrough, and I think that’s what caused it. That’s what encouraged Hitler to push back.

The beginning of the Battle of the Bulge. That’s when the counteroffensive started.

Yes. So we were resting. We were away from the front, and then we got notice to pack up. “We’re going.” So we went there, and then we went in through the Hürtgen Forest. Have you ever heard of the Hürtgen Forest?

No.

The Hürtgen Forest is a very dense forest right there in the Ardennes area. Scary.

Because of the shortage of men and because I had a little more experience, I was an acting squad leader right before I was wounded, and as a result I never got the rank. Acting as squad leader is one of the reasons I was wounded – I was giving the password for the day to our soldiers in our foxholes. Every day we had a new password.

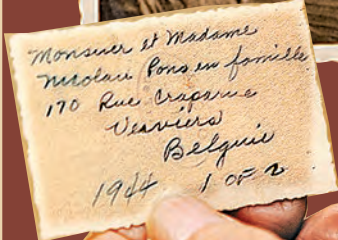

Can you explain that?

As the war progressed, some American German kids were going to Germany to fight for Germany against us. They were part of the German Army. The German Army got these kids to dress up as American soldiers and infiltrate our groups, our troops. Somebody might come up to you, somebody from the other side, and start a conversation. That’s a no-no. A foxhole is sort of a barrier. So I was giving the password of the day to our soldiers. If someone said a word to you, like “stump,” your response was something totally disassociated with it. Maybe “pulley.” You would have to say pulley, or you were in trouble.

Friend or foe.

Yes. Yes. So I was going from foxhole to foxhole giving the password for the day, and a sniper had his sights on me. I found this out ten years later, from the adjacent squad leader, whom I

This unnamed Belgian woman from the Pons family took a big risk and saved Joe Govea’s life.

Joe displays the back of the photo (above), upon which he wrote some details of the ordeal.

A Breath Away From Death

Joe Govea intentionally avoids talking about many of his harrowing World War II experiences. But he did share this story, and he paused while retelling it to keep his voice steady.

Near Verviers, Belgium, about 23 miles from Aachen, Germany (his squad’s destination), his squad took on serious casualties from the German infantry.

“We were ambushed,” Joe explained, with heavy U.S. casualties. “Two of us were wandering in the forest when we came upon a woman and her daughter – their last name was Pons. They knew there were Germans all around, so they hid us in their cellar through a trap door that was covered by the carpet.

“We went down there as quickly as we could. Just a few minutes later, we heard German soldiers stomping above us, inside the house. We didn’t make a sound.

“They didn’t know we were under their feet. A few minutes later, they were gone, and we were okay.”

saw ten years after the war. My wife and I were at the market and this guy looks at me, and he kept looking at me. I really hadn’t seen him, but my wife said, “That somebody is watching you.” I turned around and I said, “Vick!” And he looked at me and said, “Joe.” He turned as white as a ghost. He said that when I was hit, I was in motion, and the bullet hit me and spun me up in the air and I landed in a foxhole.

Wow. Where did it hit you?

On my left hip. I was hit by what they call a dum dum. The Germans were scoring the bullets so they were like a hollow point and explode on impact. I’m really surprised it didn’t tear my whole hip off. It took five surgeries to get me walking again. So I was in the hospital for a while.

Where were you when you got shot?

That was in the Hürtgen Forest.

How far away was the sniper?

I have no idea. Vick said he was close by. Vick was like me; he didn’t want to talk about the war. He said, “I thought you were dead.”

The minute you’re hit you holler, “Medic,” and the guys who don’t get enough credit, the combat medics, came for me.

They wore white coats with a red cross, and they were without a weapon. The Geneva Convention will not allow the enemy to shoot the medics.

And then you were evacuated out of there?

Yes. I was in the hospitals in France, maybe three or four, and then in England.

In the Paris General Hospital, I actually knew the ward boy – the orderly, I guess, from back home in California. His name was Poncho. Actually, Alfonso, but we called him Poncho. He looked at me and he said, “Who are you?” Here’s a guy who grew up with me, so I must have looked terrible. I had a beard and I was dirty, and I had lost a lot of weight. Battle is bad. I told him who I was, and then he said, “You’re going home. Your case is marked ZI,” Zone of Interior. So eventually I went home. I was in three or four hospitals in France, and then they sent me to Taunton, England, and that’s where I was awarded the old Purple Heart.

How long were you in England, in the hospital?

I was released the day the war ended, so about three or four months. I was in the hospital a long time, rehabbing. I didn’t see any of England except one day when they took me to a little town by the name of Bath.

So Dec. 20, when you were wounded, all the way until basically the end of the war.

Yes. They re-classified me as Attached Unassigned, just to keep me in the service until I got out. But I really didn’t do much after that. I came back to the States at the end of 1945.

So well past the end of the war.

Yes. I’m considered to be part of the occupation of Europe, but I was Attached Unassigned.

Right. Do you remember getting hit?

When I was hit, the medic said, “Do you need anything?” And that’s all I remember. I blacked out, because he gave me a little tube of morphine. I was heavily sedated for a long time, to keep me immobile.

But you know, something I remember, is that one of the hospitals in France had German war prisoners as ward boys, attending to us.

Really?

I never understood that.

Did it bother you?

No, not at all.

The Brutal Battle Of the Bulge

How far away were you from the German troops?

Depends. I remember one day – we were setting up high and the Germans were down below doing their thing. World War II was the element of surprise. You never knew where you were going or what you were going to do until you did it. The Germans were very close. Maybe like across the street.

When they were advancing, you had to shoot them.

What kind of rifle did you have?

M1 Garand.

Was it heavy?

We carried 35 pounds on our back. We were loaded.

Was there ever a time where you wished you just had a little more ammo?

Sure. You had to keep track. You didn’t want to be empty.

Do you remember the first time you had to fire your weapon for real, as opposed to practice?

No, but I remember the first time they told me to make sure we were loaded. We were in a combat area. I don’t want to talk about the rest of it.

Honor and Duty

Joe's Medals

Joe Govea, former Rifleman, First Infantry Division (Gen. Omar Bradley's outfit) during World War II, earning numerous accolades due to his service, bravery and sacrifice in being seriously wounded Dec. 20, 1944, during the Battle of the Bulge.

Joe's major awards and honors:

- Combat Infantry Badge
- Bronze Star
- Purple Heart (for being wounded in combat).
- American Campaign Medal
- European-African-Middle-Eastern Campaign Medal (with two battle stars)
- World War II Victory Medal
- Good Conduct Medal
- Battle of the Bulge Medal (commemorative)
- French Legion of Honor Medal

Joe Govea displays his Infantry Combat Badge – the Rifleman's Badge, surrounded by a wreath, signifying that he saw combat.

Without doubt the accolade of which he is most proud is his Combat Infantry Badge – the Rifleman's Badge.

"You get that when you're a rifleman in the infantry," he explained. "You have to see combat to have it. The wreath denotes combat. Anytime you see somebody wearing that, you know he's been there. When I look at pictures of high officials and generals, that's the first thing I look for."

The text that accompanies the medal reads as follows:

THE RIFLEMAN

The rifleman fights without promise of either reward or relief. Behind every river there's another hill – and behind that hill, another river. After weeks or months on the line, only a wound can offer him the comfort of safety, shelter and a bed. Those who are left to fight, fight on, evading death but knowing that with each day of evasion they have exhausted one more chance for survival. Sooner or later, unless victory comes, this chase must end on the litter or in the grave.

– General Omar Bradley

"Sometime right after the start of the war, the Air Force was getting a lot of publicity. So General Bradley, said, 'Wait a minute, the Air Force is getting its proper credit. The ground crew isn't getting any credit. We should think about the riflemen, the guys who are out there leading.' So he came up with this.

"The other awards are nice medals. But this is the one that I covet, really." ■

No problem, Joe. Do you think about these stories every day? Are they staying with you, the stories that you don't tell people?

I try to make it not part of my life.

So you'd rather not open that door.

That's right.

Got it. How long were you in the combat area before you were wounded?

I would say two or three months.

You were hit during that brutal winter, right?

Yes. It was the coldest winter in Europe ever. It was so cold that you could hardly pull the trigger; your fingers were frozen. We not only fought the enemy, we fought the weather and the elements. Can you imagine at night, when it's raining or snowing, the trees are falling and a German might be right behind you and you don't hear them? Fortunately for us, we did not have the problem that they had in the Asian theater. The Germans were not very good night fighters. They were a very well-oiled organization, but they didn't do much night fighting.

They depicted that pretty brutally in Band of Brothers.

If you watched Band of Brothers, you watched the area that I was in.

That was your life.

That was my life.

How far was Bastogne from where you were?

Not far.

Were you hungry?

One can of food, the size of a can of tomato sauce would subside us for a day.

You lived each day on a can of tomato sauce.

Well, whatever we could get. But you could live a day on it. Sometimes we would get K or D rations with chocolate bars and crackers, and Raleigh cigarettes. That was dangerous. When you smoked, you had to cover yourself because the enemy would see the smoke.

Right, or the bright flame.

At night, yes; and in the day, it was the smoke.

It was really tough.

I try not to talk about it, unless I am with buddies. I was with a guy at a funeral of another friend; we were standing there next to the casket before they did the military honors, and he said to me, "Joe, only you and I know what really happened." War is horrific.

Were you isolated and cut off? What was that like?

Yes. Combat is combat, and you don't think of the whole picture. It was designated the Battle of the Bulge, but that was only part of the front.

The title came years later. There are thousand-page books about strategies and isolation and so forth, but when you're in the reality of it as you were, you're not thinking about all of that.

You're thinking about not getting killed.

Here's something odd: The Forest Lawn Cemeteries have a Veterans and Memorial Day celebration. Walter Ehlers, who won the Medal of Honor for heroism during the Normandy invasion, was also in the First Division and was the speaker of the day. I told him I was also in the First Division, the Big Red One. He said, "How far did you get?" I said, "I got as far as the Hurtgen Forest." He said, "That's where I was wounded [again]." So was I. Turns out we were both wounded at nearly the same time, at nearly the same place.

The Past Is the Past

Have you been back to Europe?

Well, no ... in spite of the fact that my name is in the Legion of Honor building in Paris.

Have you seen it?

No. I've never been there.

Today, when you meet a German person, does it – or did it – ever bother you? Was there ever any animosity?

Never. I never held any animosity for the Japanese or the Germans, because when we would capture some of the German soldiers, they were kids just like us, following orders. So I had – I'm not going to say compassion, but I had some feeling for them. Of course they were scared, scared to death, especially the ones who understood English.

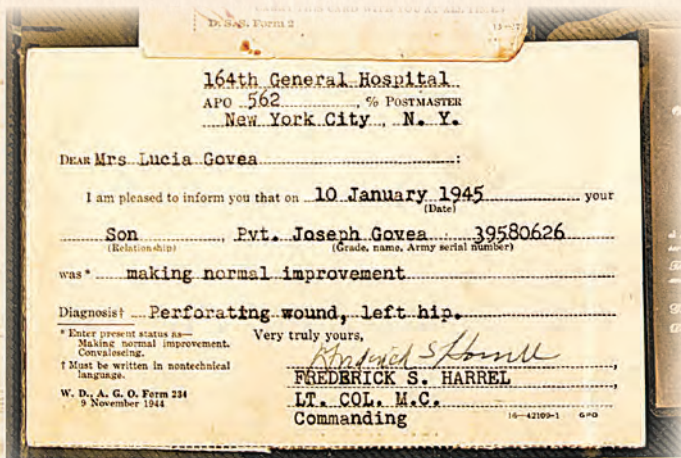

I think you're a very courageous person. Do you feel that way?

No, I don't. I'm very proud of the fact that I'm an American, that I was able to serve my country, and I did whatever I could, and I have no regrets. The military got me out of the environment I would have probably followed. It actually it helped me. It helped me see the other side of the world, because – and I say this very loosely—there's a lot of discrimination on both sides of the racial divide, between different ethnicities. Going into the service got me to deal with people in general.

What do you want people to know about your experiences in World War II? What would you like people to know about what it was like, or what you sacrificed?

Number one, I think that if they knew, they would appreciate veterans more than they do today. I think that people should know the history of any war – not necessarily just World War II, but any war. They should be aware of the sacrifice that a person makes when they put on the uniform. And [my wife] Shirley reminded me of this: Think of all the mothers who had their children go into the service and then not know if they were going to come back. I feel sometimes that there is not enough appreciation for the veterans.

This card was sent to Joe Govea's mother, Lucia, to keep her apprised of his recovery from being wounded during the Battle of the Bulge. He was recuperating in England at the time, but this card was sent out of New York.

What I remember the most is the camaraderie amongst us. We were all one. There was no difference – we were all the same, and we worked together. We had an objective and we went after it. We had goals – the unity within the military is what to me is very impressive.

I was in the military but I never saw any action. It was the Cold War, so nothing happened. But there was still camaraderie, but there probably would have been more a heightened sense if there were something happening, or our lives were in danger. We would have had to rely on each other more.

We relied on each other. I trained with a fellow in Camp Roberts who was from National City. I remember seeing him running, and shrapnel sheared his jaw off. His last name was Martinez. Something like that comes to mind, but there are other things that I don't want to talk about.

One day Shirley and my sister and brother-in-law, who was in Korea, were having dinner at the table, and my brother-in-law said, "Joe, do you know how many Germans you killed?" Shirley said that I turned as white as a sheet.

Did you answer him?

I just – no, I didn't. Some people like to talk about combat. I would rather not.

People who did it like you, you have that right. Did Band of Brothers get it right?

I've only watched small portions of it.

It's kind of hard.

Yes. It brings back too many memories.

But it must have been fairly accurate if it brought back too many memories.

Yes.

It's hard for people who haven't been in combat to not want to hear a little piece of how it was. It's human nature.

It's hard for me to talk about something when people don't have a picture of what was going on. My doctor put it kind of succinctly. He said, "You know, Joe, we never think about the weather during the war." He meant combat – the stench, the moans, the groans, the bombings, the explosions, the atmosphere. It's hard to show that on film, the way it really was.

Prayer and Patience

You mentioned before we started about your struggles with post-traumatic stress disorder, and how you got through it.

When I got out of the service, I was angry, and Shirley will tell you – and my late (first) wife would have told you more – I was very hard to get along with. I was very short-fused. I didn't show the compassion that I hope I show today. I was a totally different person. There was a situation after I got out of the service, where if I had to hurt somebody during an argument or whatever, I would have done it. I carried that with me for a while, and that's not right.

How did you get through it?

Time and prayer. I used to have nightmares. Time went on, and today I look at myself and ask, "Was I really there?" The anger is gone.

How long did it take you?

Years and years. Shirley and I have been married 29 years, and there was still a smattering of that when we got married. My daughters have told her, "You've softened Dad up."

What does your freedom mean to you?

It's the only thing in the world, freedom. Especially when I hear of other countries, how they've suppressed it.

But freedom should have its limitations, also.

I hope that our feature on you helps people know what you sacrificed for freedom.

Well, I hope and pray that people are made aware of what happens during war – not only World War II, but in warfare. More people should be aware of the sacrifice made by the veterans, regardless of branch or service. I think the schools should include this as part of their history. I used to be involved in the Veterans History Project, a program mandated by Congress that the Board of Education make all high school seniors aware of the sacrifices we made. Part of their curriculum was to interview veterans, and I used to be interviewed by high school seniors. That doesn't happen anymore.

I have received calls from kids who want to interview me over the phone. They have two or three questions and they just want to fulfill their commitment, and that is the extent of it. "Were you in the service?" "Yes." "Were you wounded?" "Yes." "How long were you in the war?" That's pretty much it. Part of the education should be the history of our wars and the sacrifices made by the veterans.

It's all too easy to declare war. People making those decisions really need to think about it – they're creating Armageddon, and people will die, young children, kids. Students need to have that knowledge when they grow up.

When I was raised in the barrio and just about draft age, I would hear, "So-and-so was killed." And even then, I wasn't smart enough or sensitive enough to think about it. You're just a kid. The government should make a real effort to teach that. I went to get my car serviced one day. My car's got the Purple Heart license plate on it. The clerk asked me, "What is that for?" She didn't know. And she was not a kid. They're not aware of it. The Purple Heart is very highly recognized, but there are other medals that are just as valid. Just the fact that you were there and were able to contribute should mean more than it does to a lot of people.

I agree. It's such an honor to talk to you, to know what you went through, even though I don't know everything. But just to know what I know now makes me a better person than I was when I came here this morning.

Well, thank you. With all sincerity, I don't feel that I'm telling a story. It's just something that happened.

It's deeper than telling a story. You lived the real thing. Do you feel you are part of the Greatest Generation?

I agree with that, and not just in that aspect of war. I saw electricity come in. I saw the radio come in. I saw television come in. I saw records come in, which people don't know what I'm talking about. I've seen so many changes in my life that it's astounding.

Right. Thanks for your time.

You're welcome. ■

There can be no more welcoming sight in the world – after a journey that took Joe far from his California home, that threatened his life on numerous occasions and nearly destroyed his left hip, that repeatedly placed him in horrible situations, that challenged him to stay warm and fed and questioning his own soul – than the rising flame of Lady Liberty over the horizon.

"After the war, I was on a battleship coming back to the United States," he recalls. "We had a band on board our ship – Les Brown and his Band of Renown. The band was playing on the ship.

"And all of the sudden I saw a lot of commotion, and people going to one side of the boat. And everyone said, 'There she is, there she is! It was the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor.

"As we got closer and closer, Les Brown started playing 'Sentimental Journey.' And we all cried.

"When we hit the port, the guys were kissing the ground and everybody was hugging each other. Can you imagine it?

"So 'Sentimental Journey' is very close to me." ■

"I went to an alternative high school, but did only three years there. They told me I had emotional problems, and that is why I am currently on Social Security."

WHEN MOVED TO L.A.:

"Two years ago. I was bored in Seattle – same old people, same weather. I was sick of Washington and needed a change. I usually spend the night in Santa Monica, but I took the bus to LA to charge my phone."

WHERE DO YOU LIVE: "On the streets in Santa Monica."

HOW HE ENDED UP ON THE STREET:

"Lack of family. There was always drama in my family, kind of like that show, 'Family Feud.' Family is so important, but when it's dysfunctional it makes it difficult. And having my emotional disability didn't help."

FAVORITE MOVIE:

"Bad Teacher with Cameron Diaz."

FAVORITE ACTOR:

"Tom Cruise. No, wait, strike that – make that Jackie Chan."

FAVORITE ACTRESS:

"Cameron Diaz."

FAVORITE MUSIC:

"Hip-hop. Michael Jackson is my favorite artist."

FAVORITE CANDY:

"I really like those mango strips, the kind with the sugar on them."

LAST THING READ:

"I really like magazines, but I need to get back into books."

LAST MEAL EATEN:

"Hot potato chips."

MOST PRIZED POSSESSION:

"My bracelet – it's a dragon's tooth with a scrimshaw of a dragon. I bought it somewhere downtown here."

MAKE A WISH: "A million dollars."

WHAT WOULD YOU DO

DIFFERENTLY: "I would have gotten out of Washington sooner. I would have gotten away from my family."

ADVICE FOR EVERYDAY PEOPLE:

"Keep moving in a positive direction, and if you have kids, keep your family unit stable for them. Be good parents."

The Club gave Pierre a Bucket and a Blanket, a toothbrush and toothpaste, soap, two pairs of socks, shampoo, hand wipes, some food, $20 and bottled water.

The interview, conducted by John Hawkins, took place June 9 at Third and Main Streets downtown.

Scenes by the Sea

Annual Shakespeare by the Sea continues in San Pedro, Woodland Hills in July, August.

L A's Shakespeare by the Sea theatre troupe, funded partially by Rec and Parks and Cultural Affairs, celebrates its 19th anniversary in 2016.

This year's season features a comedy/fantasy, Cymbeline, and the classic tragedy Othello. The productions continue at Pt. Fermin Park in San Pedro in July and August, and at Warner Center Park in Aug.

The City portion of the program's schedule is:

Cymbeline:

- This comedy is an action-adventure-fairy-tale-romance filled with magical potions, dastardly villains, ghosts, gods and lost princes.
- At Pt. Fermin Park: July 2, 8; Aug. 20
- At Warner Center Park: Aug. 4

Othello:

- This tragedy is an emotionally gripping thriller where gossip turns friendships rancid, and rumor brutally murders innocence. Othello is as unflinching in its power as it is in its heartbreak.
- At Pt. Fermin Park: July 1, 7, 9; Aug. 19

This year, the company will deliver approximately 40 performances in more than 20 locations, beginning and ending with its hometown crowd at Pt. Fermin Park in San Pedro. The tour has become a much-anticipated event each summer, drawing an audience of more than Parolles (Cylan Brown) and Diana (Kristina Teves) in Shakespeare by the Sea's 2013 production of All's Well That Ends Well, directed by Patrick Vest. Photo: Mickey Elliot.

20,000 to enjoy Shakespeare under the summer sky each of the past several years.

Founded in 1998 and funded entirely by donations and grants, Shakespeare by the Sea brings contemporary and classic works to underserved, culturally diverse audiences to ignite imagination, promote literacy and encourage artistic expression. This season's San Pedro performances are made possible in part by the City's Cultural Affairs and Rec and Parks Depts., and funds to support the tour have been committed from the Orange County Community Foundation, Los Angeles County Arts Commission and Supervisor Don Knabe.

Bring your friends, pack a picnic and settle in under the stars this summer for Shakespeare's classic plays. It can get chilly by the sea at Pt. Fermin, so dress accordingly. Bench seating is available, but you are welcome to bring chairs or blankets.

is at

The Car Club

By EVERETT BENNETT, Inspector,
Public Works/Contract Administration

Cars, Saving Lives

The LAPD hosted its 13th annual “Still Saving Lives” car show June 4 at Warner Center Park in Woodland Hills. It was a beautiful clear day and extremely hot. It was so hot I saw people frying eggs for their breakfast burritos on the asphalt.

The park was jam packed with cars, trucks, customs and exotic cars. The LAPD flew in one of its helicopters to go along with the Underwater Dive Unit and Bomb Squad. Families could ask questions and take pictures. Food trucks serving fries, grilled cheese sandwiches and Vietnamese food parked around the perimeter of the park and provided a necessary feeding ground for all the hungry spectators. The ice cream truck had a long line all day with people trying to cool off. I wasn't lucky enough to win one of the raffle prizes, but many other people were, and one special guy took home a flat screen television.

Every year this show gets better and better, so remember to put this on your 2017 summer calendar.

Airport Police Officer Jon Pino is sworn in by Airport Chief of Police Patrick Gannon.

Airport Police swore in a new officer in a ceremony held in downtown Los Angeles May 13. Officer Jon Pino and his 28 classmates comprised Los Angeles Police Academy class 11B-15. They successfully completed the grueling six-month-long academy.

Before swearing in the new officer, Airport Police Chief Patrick Gannon addressed Officer Pino and his family. “Thank you for your hard work in the academy, it was a big step but only the first of many in your career in law enforcement,” Chief Gannon said. “Welcome to the Los Angeles Airport Police.”

Officer Pino will now complete a six-month field training program specific to airport law enforcement, under the guidance of a field training officer before being assigned to the Patrol Services Section.

Cooking with the Club

with Chef Robert Larios

'Oh No, I Don't Have Marinara' Ravioli

Have you ever started cooking pasta and then realized you have no tomato-based sauce, such as marinara or spaghetti sauce? There is a substitute of ingredients that is arguably better in flavor than the typical sauces. It's the use of extra virgin olive oil, crushed red pepper flakes, dry basil, Parmigiano-Reggiano cheese, sea salt and pepper. Simplicity is at work here, but it's very effective in bringing out a classic deliciousness. In this recipe I use ravioli – store bought is okay, just as long as you find it with fresh pasta, not dried. This recipe is also a fast way to make a tasty meal for the family.

¡Buen provecho!

Chef Larios

Photography by Patricia M. Larios

Ingredients:

- Fresh (not dry) 10 oz. package of ravioli (I used a chicken- and ricotta-filled version for this recipe)
- Sea salt and freshly cracked pepper to taste
- Parmigiano-Reggiano cheese, finely grated
- 2 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil
- 1 teaspoon crushed red pepper flakes
- Pinch of dry basil
- 1 cup water (seasoned with extra virgin olive oil, sea salt and freshly cracked pepper)

Serves 2 to 4

Directions:

1

Prepare your cooking area with the ingredients. Place a saucepot on high heat with water. Add a pinch of sea salt, freshly cracked pepper and one tablespoon extra virgin olive oil. Let boil.

2

Once water is boiling, add the ravioli and let cook until the water returns to boil.

3

Turn off stovetop and use a strainer over the sink to drain water from the pot, then return ravioli to the pot – now without any water. Begin plating by adding about six to nine pieces of ravioli. Add red crushed pepper, dried basil, Parmigiano-Reggiano cheese and drizzle one tablespoon of extra virgin olive oil.

Serve and enjoy!

Cooking TIDBIT

Other ravioli fillings can be purchased at your local market, or you may make your own at home – but contact me before you do, if you have never made homemade pasta. You can use the olive oil, basil, Parmigiano-Reggiano cheese, sea salt, pepper and crushed pepper combination instead of a tomato based sauce on any pasta.

[Food Dictionary]

Ravioli:

An Italian specialty of little square or round pillows of noodle dough filled with any of various mixtures, including cheese, meat or vegetables. Ravioli are boiled, then sometimes baked with a cream, cheese or tomato sauce. Chinese-style ravioli are called wontons; Jewish-style are called kreplach.

DWP

RED NOSE DAY

DWP Saticoy Yard has fun for fundraising event.

Employees at the DWP's Saticoy Yard put on red noses for ... you guessed it ... Red Nose Day. Red Nose Day is a function of the international charity Comic Relief. People are requested to don a red nose, and the day culminates with a telethon in which funds are raised for children's charities. This year's Red Nose Day was held May 26; the effort raised more than $30 million in the United States. Thanks to Rosa Tristan, DWP, for submitting the fun photos. "It was so much fun doing this," Rosa says, "and for such a great cause."
